My Lord, I understand you not; you treat me as a child and gibe at me, mislike my dress and my complexion, and anon you plead as it were lover-wise for the pasture of my lips. If I be child you have no need of my kisses; if woman, I should claim not gibes, but homage. Methinks you are an actor that hath but ill conned his part. Sey. A shrewd guess and a shrewd thrust. Yesterday thou wert a child, to be clipped and chidden and cajoled. But tis a tricky sprite, Dan Cupid; and his darts strike deeper than we know. Thou art not the child of yesterday;--and methinks, have played my lover s part too well. Ah! Bess! Bess! There is a fire in my veins and I am hungry for thy lips. If it be a part I will play it boldly; play it to the end! (The others have entered.) Som. Brother, the end is here. Methinks for an actor your art is false and you feel your part too well. Sey. (bowingprofoundly.) God save your Royal Grace. Som. (violently.) Have I not warned your Highness full oft that this vaulting ambition in my brother offers indignity to the throne and office of a King. Altho he may be my natural brother I know him for a cockerel gamester, a caitiff filled with greed of power, who throws for dice his...
