Excerpt: .portion is in the northwest corner, where the surface lies over 900 feet above sea level. The surface is for the most part a high till plain which has been more or less dissected by streams. Only two streams are large enough to have excavated well-developed valleys. (See Pl. I.) A low, broad belt of moraine runs north and south along the west edge of the county, and in places resembles closely in topography the surrounding till plains. The surface forms of the entire county are determined by the glacial deposits and by the streams, for the rock is everywhere so deeply covered that its irregular surface has no influence upon the present topography. White River controls the drainage of the county, and entering it from the east flows west and south to cross the south county line at about the middle. The valley...
